and composed by himself. He would pronounce the dictum at the very top of his voice$_{f}$ roaring out those lines in a thundering tone, making a display of his rhetorical accomplishments like the very best and finished cf orators. I remember those words, every letter of them, and quote them here, They are as follows.

I wish at the time of Death, I be born, and take revenge in that simple way".

It seems quite possible that as a result of some family troubles of his, some one might have done him some very serious wrong which deranged his brain to some extent and caused him to repeat this most pious wish of his for a noble revenge on his enemy. But the manner in which he thundered out his formula up to the word 'revenge'\ sounded something revengeful indeed! If one were to hear him pronounce the first portion only roaring like a lion as he did, one would indeed take him for a violent and blood-thirsty fiend, whose spirit of revenge was awakened to such a pitch, that, if he were to meet his adversary the moment he was uttering those ominous words, he would dash at him in the twinkling of an eye, throw him flat on the ground and, like Bhima sitting
